The ethnography of visual culture

Ethnography according to research is the study of human behavior, social interaction and perception occurring amongst individuals in various settings. This paper focuses on the visual cultures of ethnography. The study here also entails taking a look at wildlife tourism culture across the globe. The study also decides to utilize visual ethnography in data collection. This method of data collection according to the researcher states some vital moments in life that can be described best by films and pictographs.

Research statement

This paper focuses on the effects of visual ethnography on wildlife tourism. This can be achieved by use of tourist photographs by interacting with and observing animals in their environments. The paper also evaluates how films and still pictures make interwoven connections of personal practices, experiences as well as social relationships meaningful in the tourism world.

Methodology

The main research methodology employed for this study is ethnography. This research has decided to use this option based on the fact that it is the most ideal way to capture real activities of relationships between the behaviors of humans as well as their relationships with their animals in their environment. Pink (2007) states that the interaction of humans and social science can be seen best via visualization. Written materials cannot clearly bring out the nature of interaction between animals and man in their habitat.

To achieve the best results, the activities taking place in game reserves as well as animal parks with holidaymakers going about their normal
