1. An alien race is bent on the destruction of humanity. To do so, they have fired a weapon at the Sun that has changed the color of light that the Sun shines on Earth. Instead of the normal white light, the Sun now only gives off green light! We're doomed!

What effect will this change to the Sun's light have on the plants on earth and why are we now doomed as a species? (EXTRA CREDIT) -> What is something we humans could do to avoid our inevitable extinction in this specific alien-related scenario?

2. While working your side hustle as an international assassin, you are tasked with developing some new poisons. You remember from AP Bio that the process of respiration is key to maintaining life, so you decide to focus your efforts on disrupting it.

You first decide that a chemical that destroys pyruvate would make a good poison. Without pyruvate, what steps of cellular respiration would be interrupted? Where in the cell could you target pyruvate for destruction and why would this be a good location?

You then focus on disrupting the membrane protein known as ATP Synthase. You design a chemical that can fill the active site of ATP Synthase, where phosphate usually would bind. What kind of inhibitor is this chemical and why would this cause cellular respiration to be disrupted?
