

AP Bio Lab 11 - Animal Behavior

Introduction:

Ethology is the study of animal behavior. Behavior is an animal's response to sensory input, and falls into two basic categories: learned and innate (inherited).

Orientation behaviors place the animal in its most favorable environment. In taxis, the animal moves toward or away from a stimulus. Taxis is often exhibited when the stimulus is light, heat, moisture, sound, or chemicals. Kinesis is a movement that is random and does not result in orientation with respect to a stimulus. If an organism responds to bright light by moving away, that is a taxis. If an animal responds to bright light by random movements in all directions, that is kinesis.

Agonistic behavior is exhibited when animals respond to each other by aggressive or submissive responses. Often the agonistic behavior is simply a display that makes the organism look big or threatening. It is sometimes studied in the laboratory with Bettas (Siamese Fighting Fish).

Mating behaviors may involve a complex series of activities that facilitate finding, courting, and mating with a member of the same species.

Exercise 11A: General Observation of Behaviors

In this lab, you will be working with terrestrial isopods commonly known as pillbugs, sowbugs, or roly-polies. These organisms are members of the Phylum Arthropoda, Class Crustacea, which also includes shrimp and crabs. Most members of this group respire through gills.

Procedure:

1. Place 10 pillbugs (or however many you have) and a small amount of bedding material in a small petri dish. They generally try to get out so cover the dish with plastic wrap or a petri dish cover.
2. Observe the pillbugs for 10 minutes. Make notes on their general appearance, movements about the dish, and interactions with each other. Notice if they seem to prefer one area over another, if they keep moving, settle down or move sporadically. Note any behaviors that involve 2 or more pillbugs. Do not interfere with the specimens in any way.
