

All of the following statements about neurotransmitters are true except neurotransmitter molecules can diffuse across the cleft to the postsynaptic membrane where it binds to receptor molecules.

binding of neurotransmitter molecules allows Na^+ to diffuse into the postsynaptic neuron, causing depolarization.

acetylcholinesterase is present in synapses to inactivate the neurotransmitter molecules once it has initiated a response.

the movement of the neurotransmitter molecules across the synaptic cleft occurs by active transport.

neurotransmitter molecules are released from membrane-bound sacs known as the synaptic vesicles.

<< Question 2 - Correct Answer >>

Create a null hypothesis when investigating the effect of alcohol on the CFFT.

The eye is able to distinguish separate stimuli from a flickering light up to a threshold frequency of 16 flickers per second. This is a frequency of 16 hertz. Once the threshold frequency is reached the eye can no longer distinguish the flickers as separate stimuli. The frequency at which this happens is called the critical flicker fusion threshold (CFFT).

To find a person's CFFT the following is performed.

- The person looks into a binocular eyepiece through which two white lights are flickered.
- The flickering frequency is started at 4 hertz then gradually increased at a constant rate.
- When the person feels that the flickering frequency has become constant, they press a button that gives them their CFFT.
- This is repeated to give ten values for each person.

An investigation was carried out on the effect of alcohol on the CFFT ten males aged 25 to 35. The investigation was carried out as follows.

Day 1: The men were allowed five minutes to drink 250cm^3 of apple juice. The CFFT was measured after 30 minutes.

Day 2: The men were allowed five minutes to drink 250cm^3 of apple juice containing 16 grams of alcohol. The CFFT was measured after 30 minutes.

Which of the following is a possible null hypothesis for the investigation outlined above?

Drinking alcohol has no effect on the critical flicker fusion threshold.

Drinking alcohol has a significant effect on the critical flicker fusion threshold.

Drinking apple juice has no effect on the critical flicker fusion threshold.

Males have a greater CFFT value than females.
