

Pediatric Review Questions-Answers and Rationales

- 1) Parents of a 6-month-old breast fed baby ask the nurse about introducing new food into their baby's diet. What food would be the nurse's best response?

- a. Cereal
- b. Fruit juice
- c. Diced vegetables
- d. Boiled chicken

Around 6-7 months cereal may be introduced, usually starting with rice cereal and/or oatmeal. Fruits and vegetables are introduced afterwards; fruit juices would not be introduced until after the fruit has been introduced. All food should be pureed, since the infant has very few teeth and is unable to grind up the food. Meat is not introduced until after all other foods have been introduced, and the infant/toddler has sufficient teeth to grind up the meat.

- 2) Which child should not receive an immunization at a routine well-child visit?

- a. 3-month old with a runny nose
- b. 6-year old with history of chronic asthma
- c. 12-year old receiving chemotherapy
- d. 15-year old with documented allergy to eggs

Immunizations are contraindicated in the presence of chemotherapy, radiation, steroids, and severe, febrile illness. A runny nose or cold should not cause a delay in administering routine vaccinations. Presence of an allergy to eggs may indicate a need for an alternative type of flu vaccination, but does not contraindicate receiving most immunizations.

- 3) A newborn is having difficulty maintaining a body temperature above 95 F, and is placed in a radiant warmer. Which is the priority intervention?

- a. Protect the eyes of the newborn from the heat
- b. Warm all liquids and medications before administration
- c. Monitor the newborn's temperature
- d. Avoid touching the newborn with cold hands

Newborns have difficulty with thermoregulations, and are prone to temperature fluctuations; hypothermia as well as hyperthermia are dangerous to the newborn. A newborn's eyes must be protected from phototherapy light, not from the radiant warmer. While it is a good practice not to handle any newborn with cold hands, this is not a priority intervention; liquids and medications should be at room temperature.

- 4) The nurse is providing information about side effects of routine vaccinations. The nurse recognizes teaching has been effective when the parents identify which symptom that must be reported immediately?

- a. Irritability
- b. Slight edema at injection site
- c. Local tenderness of arm site
- d. Temperature of 102.5 F
