This book focuses on the theme of the impact of education development on rural poverty reduction in China. Firstly, it reviews in detail the research results on the relationship between education and poverty at home and abroad and then analyzes in depth the mechanism of the role of education in promoting rural poverty reduction, taking into account the causes of rural poverty and anti-poverty measures and tools. On this basis, we empirically analyze the effects of education level, education type, compulsory education law implementation and university expansion policies on rural poverty in China based on macro and micro spatial and non-spatial static and dynamic and unidimensional and multidimensional poverty perspectives with the help of spatial lag model, SAR, spatial error model, SEM, logit model, double difference model and breakpoint regression model. Finally, integrating the empirical results with the actual national situation, relevant policy recommendations are proposed to promote rural anti-poverty in terms of upgrading education level, optimizing education level structure and strengthening vocational education development. In order to enrich the research results related to education development and poverty alleviation, provide guidance for assessing the quality of precise poverty alleviation as well as improve the targeting and effectiveness of future poverty alleviation work and provide more valuable references for decision making in the anti-poverty cause in China. Spices Production to Products B. Recent Advances in Understanding Plant Hormone Transporters Markus Geisler,2020-04-24 Since the first postulation of auxin function by the Darwins many other plant hormones have been identified and most of them have been found to be synthesized at different sites from their places of action Hormone transport and thus the responsible hormone transporters are therefore essential for a precise regulation of plant hormone action which has been repeatedly supported by severe developmental and physiological phenotypes reported for hormone transporter loss of function mutants Plant transporters

have been shown to be involved in short and long distance transport of hormones. Short distance transport between cells seems to be sufficient for a local hormone action in some tissues such as seeds which seem to require exporter and importer proteins in adjacent cells as shown for example for abscisic acid. During long distance transport with the transpiration stream or in the phloem demonstrated for many but not all plant hormones including auxins, abscisic acid, cytokinins, gibberelins, strigolactones and salicylic acid, transporters are thought to function in loading and unloading processes. Similarly in cases where long distance transport is achieved by cell to cell transport such as for auxins, the highly coordinated action of import and export transporters at the contact surfaces of neighboring cells is apparently needed. However, all these processes are far from being understood on the molecular level. Currently it appears that many hormones are transported by members of distinct transporter classes ranging from primary active pumps that couple hormone translocation to direct ATP hydrolysis, antiporters and symporters that use the proton motive force to create hormone concentration gradients and to facilitators. Among those the ATP binding cassette ABC family and the Nitrate transporter family NPF seem to be dominant but currently it is unclear how individual transporters cooperate to achieve a systemic level of transport.

Furthermore, in most cases several pairs of importers and exporters are required but how these are correctly allocated in order to guarantee the function of a complex hormonal network is unknown. While remarkable progress has been made on hormone transporter regulation on the transcription and post transcriptional level for transporters involved in long distance transport such as auxin, regulation of transporter trafficking, stability and activity is less understood for other hormones.
