

VEGIUM LAB

Average Atomic Mass

Objectives

- Calculate the weight of each isotope of the fictitious element "VEGIUM".
- Calculate the relative abundances of the isotopes of "VEGIUM".
- Calculate from experimental data the average mass of "VEGIUM".

Introduction

Isotopes are atoms of the same element having different masses due to different numbers of neutrons. The atomic mass of an element is a weighted average, taking into account both the relative abundances and masses of each isotope of that element, as it occurs in nature. The relative abundances and masses of each isotope, particularly one measured in the laboratory, are not directly related or related quantitatively. The relative abundances are obtained by mass and measure the fractional relative abundance of each type of particle in nature. These data are a weighted average as calculated to determine the atomic mass of the element.

Purpose

In this lab you will carry out experiments and perform the necessary calculations to determine the relative mass of "VEGIUM". Three isotopes of "VEGIUM" have been discovered in nature (green, pink, and black crystal grains). These isotopes are different particles of "VEGIUM" having different masses. Unlike real isotopes, the synthesized red, blue, purple, yellow, green, and black crystal grains differ slightly in mass, so you will determine the average mass of each type of "VEGIUM" particle. Then you will determine the relative abundance of each isotope, and use the data along with the isotopic masses to calculate the weighted average mass, or atomic mass, of "VEGIUM".

Materials & Equipment

- 100 mg of "VEGIUM"
- glass beaker, balance
- weighing boat (that will sit on weighing scale)

Experimental Procedure

Carry out the following steps and record your results in your lab notes. Show all calculations neatly on a separate sheet of paper. Report all numbers to the most significant figures.

1. Weigh all the beads, then all the green, then all the black/gray beads. Record your data.
 2. Count all the beads, then all the green, then all the black/gray beads. Record your data.
 3. Divide the total mass of each isotope by the number of each isotope to get the average mass of each isotope.
- Note: In all cases record the average mass in the table. The numbers in the "total" column are not for calculating anything. Use your numbers to find each mass. It is an important lesson to show each value being measured. The fact that these are different
