General Advice • • • • • It is very important that you look very closely at the 'command' or 'directive' words used in a question.

These tell you what we are looking for. If a question asks you to 'identify', 'state' or 'calculate' something, you should not write a very long answer. Very often, with a 'discuss' question, you will be expected to look at something from two contrasting points of view and then come to a reasoned and well supported conclusion. It is also important that you look closely at the number of marks that are awarded for each part of a question.

This will give you guidance as to how long you should spend on each particular part. Some parts of a question will only gain you two or four marks while other questions will have sections worth eight and twelve marks. Remember to look very closely at the precise wording of each part of a question. You need to make absolutely certain that your answer clearly relates to what is specifically required. For example, you may answer a question about inflation and write all you know about how it is measured, but the actual question
