

The Digestive System

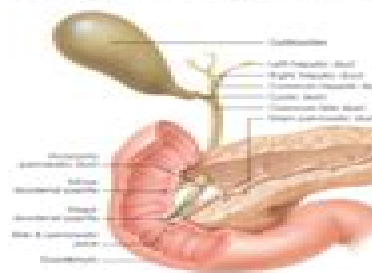

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food is broken down mechanically in the mouth or physically through a series of chemical reactions and enzymatic secretions, allowing nutrients to be absorbed. The digestive system also removes indigestible components that must be excreted as the waste of the gastrointestinal tract.

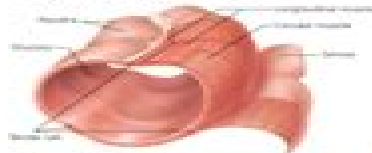

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the pancreas by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is secreted into the duodenum. The pancreas also produces insulin, a hormone that regulates blood sugar levels. The liver produces bile, which is secreted into the gallbladder.

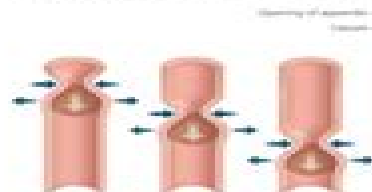

Layers of large intestine

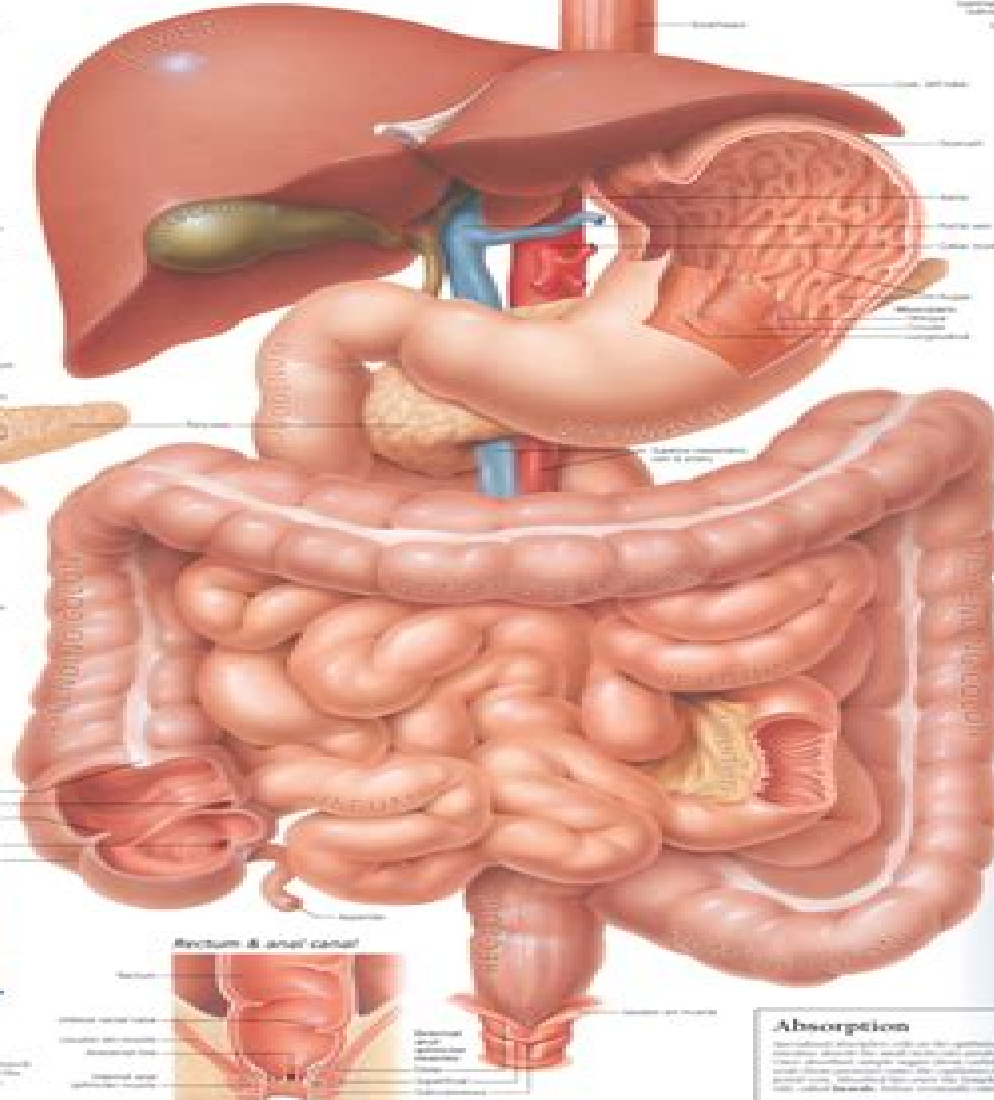

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, ascending colon, transverse colon, descending colon, sigmoid colon, and rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is broken down and absorbed.

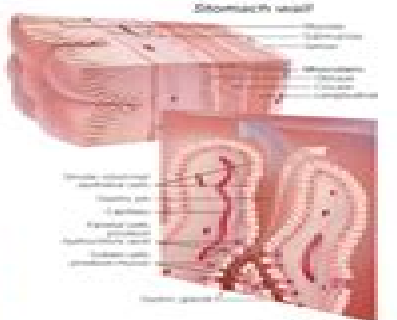

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, produced by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. The salivary glands are located in the mouth and neck.

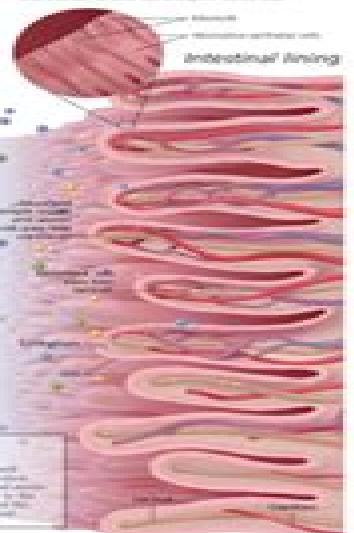

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia and the pylorus. The cardia is the opening of the stomach into the esophagus, and the pylorus is the opening of the stomach into the small intestine.

Small intestine

The small intestine is a long, coiled tube that is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. It is divided into three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, and the jejunum and ileum are the second and third parts, respectively.

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of the majority of the nutrients from the food. The nutrients are absorbed into the bloodstream through the villi, which are small finger-like projections that increase the surface area of the intestinal lining.
