de capital individuel      Favoriser l'acquisition en capital humain durant la pandémie, 2020      Analyse comparative de l'investissement en capital humain en Lorraine et au Luxembourg Carlo Klein, 2001

Le but de notre étude est d'estimer des fonctions de gains identiques pour la région française de la Lorraine et pour le Luxembourg. Nous rappelons d'abord les principes théoriques la base des fonctions de gains et ensuite nous proposons de faire nos estimations partir de données de panels et avec une méthode de variables instrumentales adaptées aux données de panels. Les estimations nous indiquent une corrélation négative entre le niveau de formation et l'effet individuel ce que nous attribuons l'existence de taux d'escompte subjectifs non observés. Si au niveau théorique nous introduisons la notion de risque dans notre analyse nous constatons qu'en présence d'un investissement risque croissant et d'une aversion pour le risque de la part des investisseurs le niveau optimal d'investissement en capital humain est inférieur par rapport celui réalisé dans une situation information parfaite. Ce constat théorique nous amène supposer que l'existence d'assurances sociales peut être considérée comme une assurance contre le risque lié l'investissement en capital humain.
