These findings suggest that the primary mechanism of action of the intervention is through the reduction of the number of cigarettes smoked per day. This is consistent with the findings of the previous studies, which have shown that the primary mechanism of action of the intervention is through the reduction of the number of cigarettes smoked per day.

These various elements will determine the operation of markets and consequently the rate of return available to the investor. The investor must also consider a number of important questions: How much money should be invested in each of the assets? What strategy will produce the best results? Should he use leverage?
