

Airplanes

Within a century, airplanes have not only fulfilled humanity's ancient wish to fly but also have become a means of transportation used by many people and can quickly cover great distances. Even though the earliest models—made of wood, fabric, and steel—have evolved into huge jets capable of carrying hundreds of passengers over oceans, as well as into supersonic military aircraft, all planes are governed by the same physical laws.

Hold Up by the Wing

The upper surface of an aircraft's wing is curved, but the lower side is straight. This shape causes the air flowing above the wing to speed up, creating a low-pressure area. The air below the wing, however, is not moving as fast, so the pressure is higher. This difference in pressure is what holds the airplane up in the flow of air as it moves past it.

Propulsion

In order to fly, an airplane must be constantly propelled forward. The most common method of propulsion uses the reaction force of hot gases coming from the burning of fuel.

- 1 The air enters the engine and is compressed.
- 2 The compressed air is heated by the fuel, causing it to expand and push the piston forward.
- 3 The piston is connected to the propeller, which turns the propeller.
- 4 The propeller pushes the air back, creating a reaction force that pushes the plane forward.

Supersonic Engines

Mach

A Mach number is a ratio of the speed of an object to the speed of sound. The speed of sound is approximately 343 meters per second (1,125 feet per second) at sea level.

In Flight

When an airplane is in flight, it is constantly changing its position and direction. The forces acting on it are lift, drag, thrust, and weight.

Lift

Lift is the upward force that keeps the airplane in the air. It is created by the difference in pressure between the top and bottom of the wing.

Drag

Drag is the force that opposes the motion of the airplane. It is created by the friction between the air and the airplane's surface.

Thrust

Thrust is the forward force that pushes the airplane forward. It is created by the engines, which push the air back.

Altitude

Altitude is the height of the airplane above the ground. It is measured in feet or meters. The altitude of an airplane is determined by the pilot, who can adjust the engines and the wing to maintain a constant altitude.
