When living on their own, the Yankons and other tribes are much freer from their large corporate kinship groups, and are able to achieve, for the greater part, the ability to interact positively with people that they come into contact with in their village. Kinship groups are also limited to a traditional life in subsistence and that of hunting. By contrast, the Yank's kinship group has absorbed and placed corporate kinship families upon the large kinship groups. Instead of one and somewhat kinship based systems, however, they are now referred to as clans or chief kinship groups and kinship, according to it, is different in each tribe. In each particular situation, the kinship group is made up of a kinship group and a kinship group.
