

All My sons

Arthur Miller

Short summary:

Joe and Kate Keller had two sons, Chris and Larry. Keller was a successful businessman owned a manufacturing plant with Steve Deever, and their families were close. During the war, Keller's and Deever's manufacturing plant had a very profitable contract with the U.S. Army, supplying airplane parts. One morning, a shipment of defective parts came in. Keller didn't want to slow business he sent a group that he knew to be defective (not working perfectly), and twenty-one pilots died as a result.

Steve and Keller were arrested, but Keller claimed that the parts went out without his knowledge and that his partner was the one who had covered it up. Keller went home free, while Steve remained in jail.

Larry, was missing in action, but his mother insisted that he was still alive. Later we learn that he committed suicide on learning of his father's arrest.

Chris has asked Ann (Steve's daughter and Larry's old girlfriend) to marry him. Ann's brother George arrived to stop the wedding. He had gone to visit Steve in jail to tell him that his daughter was getting married, and then he left newly convinced that his father was innocent and convinced of Keller's guilt. Chris's confidence in his father's innocence is shaken, however, and in a confrontation with his parents, he is told by Mother that he must believe that Larry is alive. If Larry is dead, Mother claims, then it means that Keller killed him by shipping out those defective parts.

Mother told Keller that he ought to volunteer to go to jail if Chris wanted him to. She also talked to Ann and continued insisting that Larry is alive. Ann was forced to show Mother the letter that Larry wrote to her before he died, which was essentially a suicide note. The note basically confirms Mother's belief that if Larry is dead, then Keller is responsible—not because Larry's plane had the defective parts, but because Larry killed himself in response to the family responsibility and shame due to the defective parts.

Keller entered, and Mother was unable to prevent Chris from reading Larry's letter aloud. Keller now finally understood that all the dead pilots were his sons. He says that he was going into the house to get a jacket, and then he would drive to the jail. But a moment later, a gunshot is heard—Keller has killed himself.
