

Chapter Summary

Steps Toward Independence

Lesson 1: The Texas Revolution Begins

- The arrival of General Martín de Cós with more Mexican soldiers worried Texas settlers. As a result, the settlers started committees of correspondence to unify Texans.
- The first conflict of the Texas Revolution was the Battle of Gonzales on October 2, 1835. The battle, which was a victory for the Texans, began when Mexican forces tried to take away a cannon located in Gonzales.
- After Texan forces took control of Goliad, troops under Stephen F. Austin advanced toward San Antonio and laid siege to the city.
- Delegates attending the Consultation of 1835 were divided on whether or not Texas should declare its independence. The Consultation eventually adopted the "Declaration of the People of Texas in General Convention Assembled." It also formed a provisional government and created the Army of the People under the command of Sam Houston.

Lesson 2: The Winter of 1835–1836

- On November 26, 1835, Texan troops attacked a mule train heading toward San Antonio. This battle is known as the "Grass Fight" because the mules were carrying grass to feed Spanish livestock.
- Benjamin Milam led a force of men to attack San Antonio. The resulting Battle of San Antonio de Béxar lasted four days. On December 9, 1835, San Antonio fell to the Texans.
- The Army of the People included Tejano and African American fighters. After Mexico had gained independence from Spain, Mexico passed a law that declared freed African Americans equals to Anglo American colonists. Because of this decision, many African Americans moved to Texas looking for a better life.
- Phillip Dimmitt proposed a plan to attack the port of Matamoros, at the mouth of the Rio Grande. Before the expedition could begin, news arrived that forces under Santa Anna were marching toward San Antonio.
- Disagreements arose between Governor Henry Smith and the general council. The Texan provisional government became so divided that, during the month of February 1836, Texas was virtually without a government.
