

The Digestive System

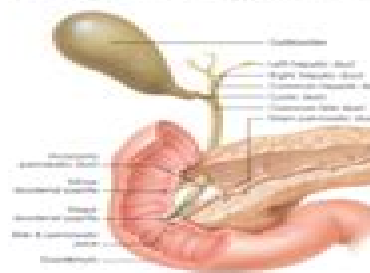

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

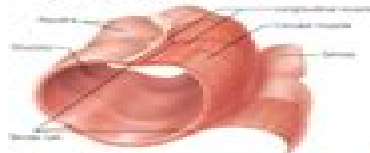

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs that help in the digestive process. The liver produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder and released into the duodenum to help digest fats. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is released into the duodenum to help digest proteins and carbohydrates.

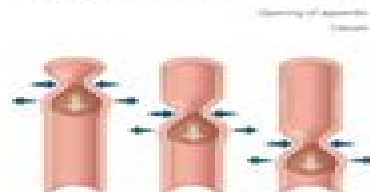

Layers of large intestine

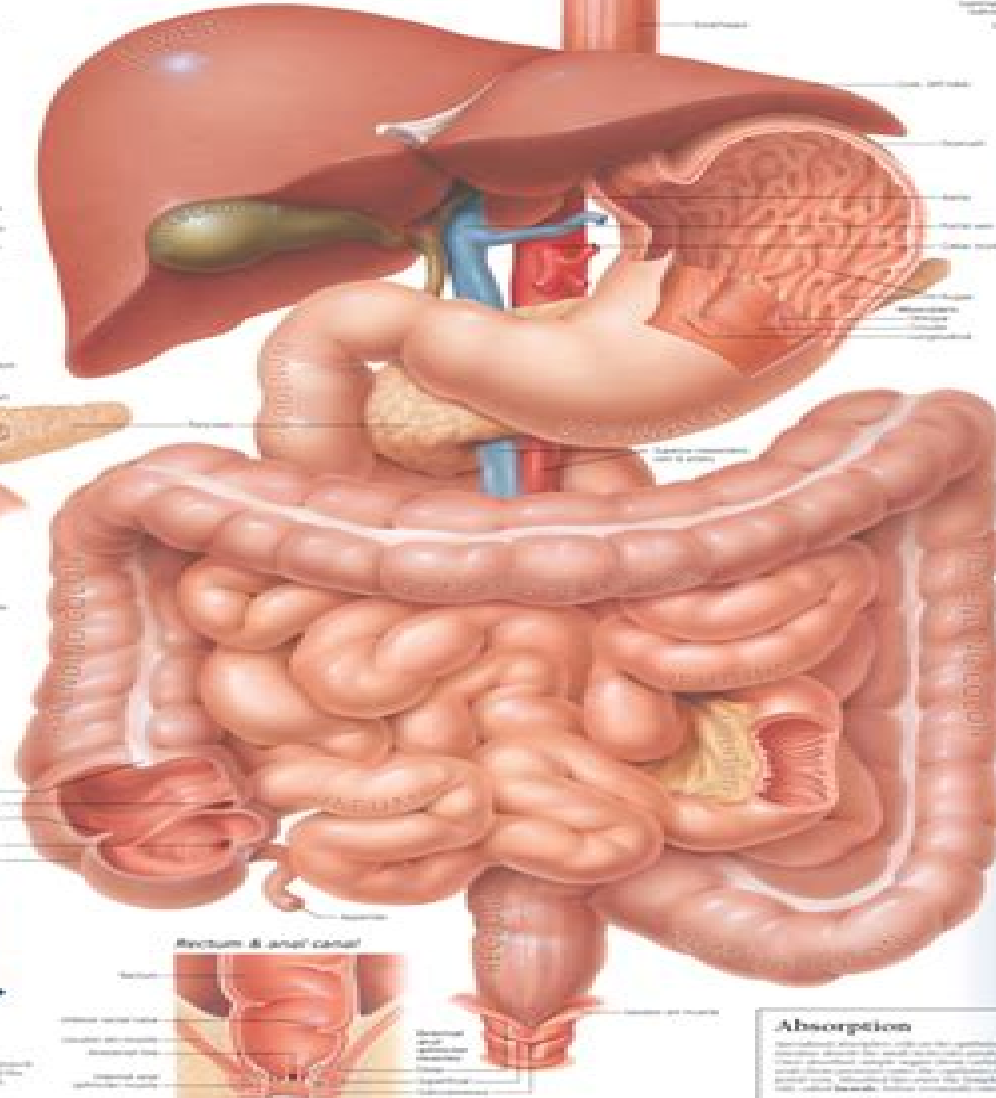

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the remaining indigestible food material, and for forming and storing feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

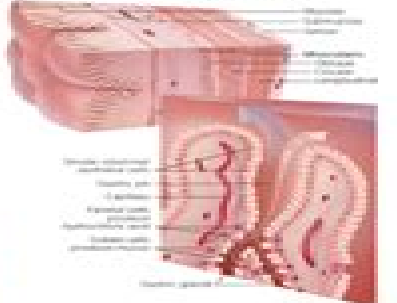

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. Saliva, the watery fluid secreted by the salivary glands, moistens the food and helps in the digestion of carbohydrates. Saliva also contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of starches. The salivary glands are the parotid, sublingual, and submandibular glands.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It is located in the upper left part of the abdomen. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa. The stomach also contains gastric glands that secrete gastric juice, which contains the enzyme pepsin for the digestion of proteins.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. It is responsible for the digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly coiled and has a large surface area for absorption. The lining of the small intestine is covered with intestinal villi, which increase the surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the movement of nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal villi, which are covered with a thin layer of epithelial cells. The nutrients are then transported to the liver and the rest of the body through the bloodstream.
