

The Digestive System

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The pancreas, which is a small, elongated organ, is located in the duodenum. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is secreted into the duodenum through the pancreatic duct. The liver, which is a large, reddish-brown organ, is located in the upper right quadrant of the abdomen. The liver produces bile, which is secreted into the duodenum through the common bile duct.

Layers of large intestine

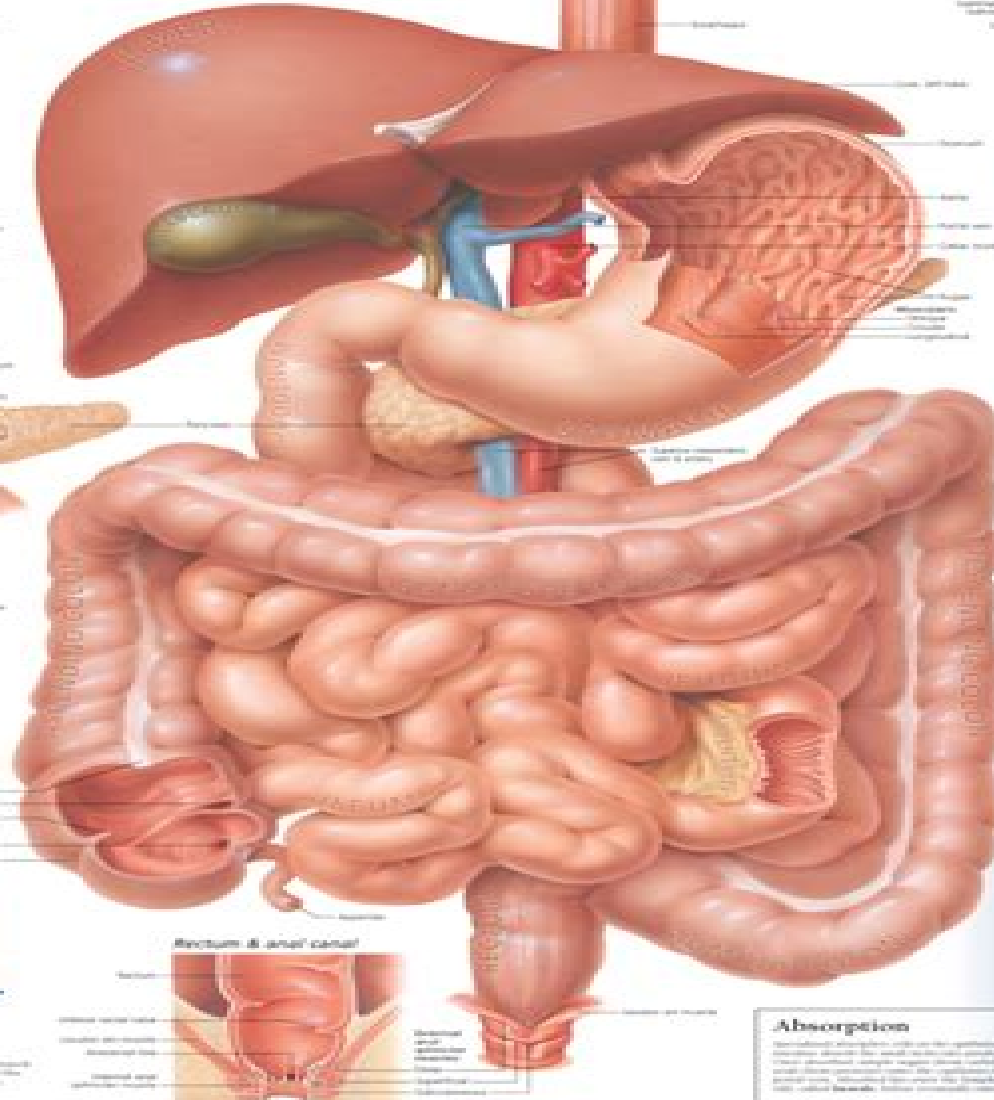

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested material that enters it. The large intestine also produces vitamin K and vitamin B12.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful, rhythmic contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the peristaltic reflex, which is a reflex action that causes the smooth muscle to contract.

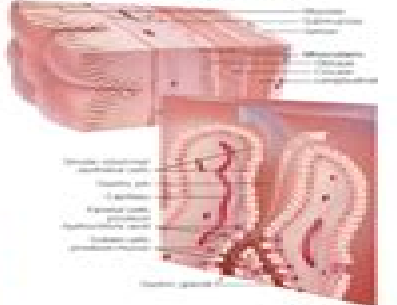

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. The food is broken down into small pieces, which are then swallowed and enter the stomach. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, which is secreted into the mouth. Saliva contains the enzyme amylase, which begins the digestion of carbohydrates.

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juice. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardiac region and the pyloric region. The cardiac region is the part of the stomach that is closest to the esophagus, and the pyloric region is the part of the stomach that is closest to the small intestine.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for receiving chyme from the stomach. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for the majority of the digestion of food. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine, and it is responsible for absorbing the remaining nutrients.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the transport of the nutrients from the small intestine into the bloodstream. The nutrients are absorbed through the intestinal lining, which is composed of villi. The villi are small, finger-like projections that increase the surface area of the intestinal lining, allowing for more efficient absorption of nutrients.
