

The Digestive System

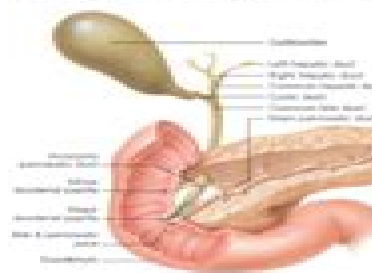

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

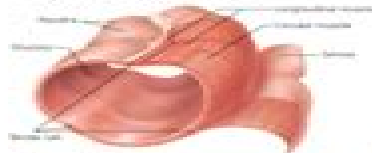

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are accessory organs that help in the digestive process. The liver produces bile, which is stored in the gallbladder and released into the duodenum to help digest fats. The pancreas produces pancreatic juice, which is also released into the duodenum to help digest proteins and carbohydrates.

Layers of large intestine

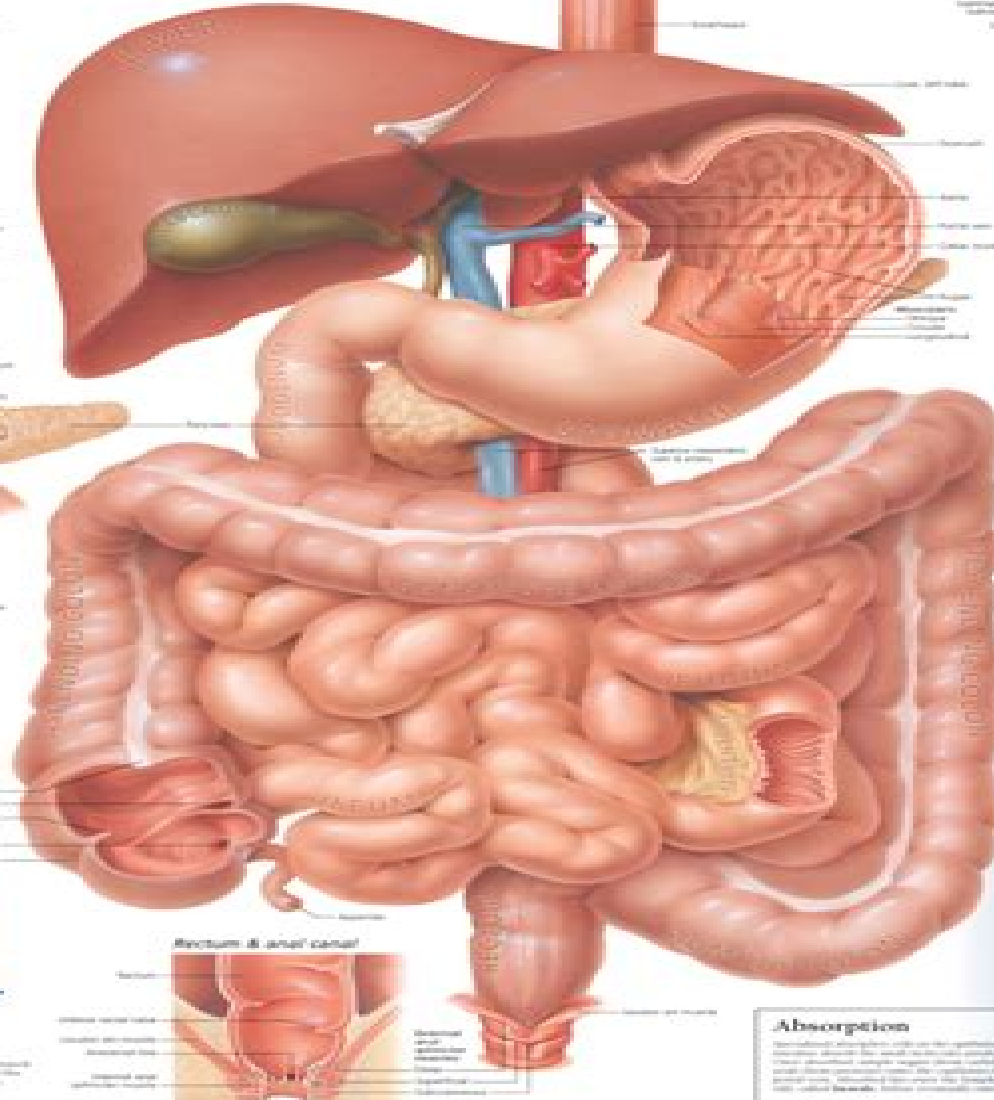

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested material, forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of waves of contraction called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the wave which, when it moves, the material is pushed forward.

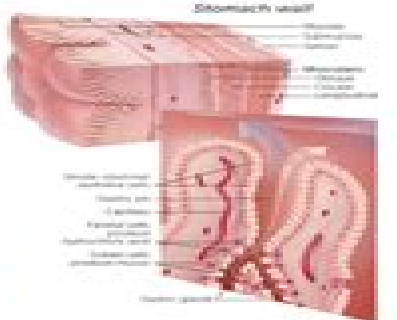

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. The tongue helps in the process of mastication. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, which is used to moisten the food and to begin the digestion of carbohydrates. The salivary glands also produce enzymes that help in the digestion of proteins and fats.

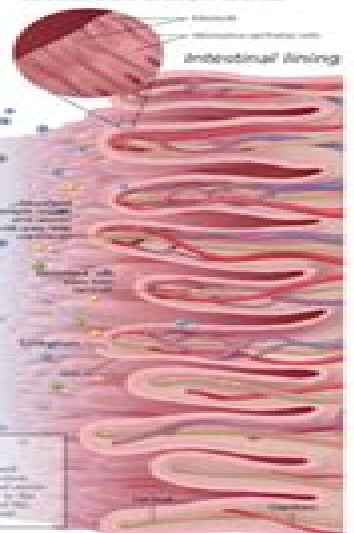

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and mixing food with gastric juices. The stomach is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach wall is composed of several layers, including the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and serosa.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The small intestine is responsible for the majority of the digestion and absorption of nutrients. The small intestine is highly folded, which increases its surface area for absorption.

Absorption

The process of absorption involves the transport of the nutrients and water from the small intestine into the bloodstream. The nutrients are absorbed through the villi and microvilli of the intestinal lining. The water is absorbed through the osmotic gradient.
