

The Digestive System

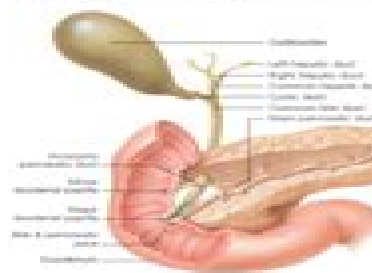

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

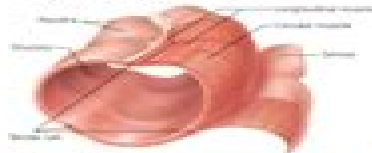

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, chyme moves into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, where it is mixed with bile secreted by the liver and pancreatic juice secreted by the pancreas. This area is a mixing region on the intestine where the duodenum opens into the descending large intestine. The liver and pancreas are accessory organs that help in the digestion process.

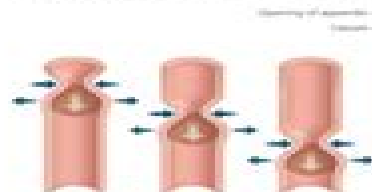

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, and the sigmoid colon. It is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food, forming feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions move the material forward and the food is then, when the stomach has relaxed.

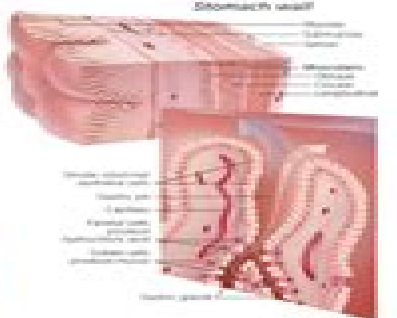

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing the food breaks it into smaller pieces, making it easier to swallow. Saliva, secreted by the salivary glands, helps in the digestion of food. It contains the enzyme amylase, which breaks down carbohydrates into simpler sugars. Saliva also helps in the lubrication of the food, making it easier to swallow.

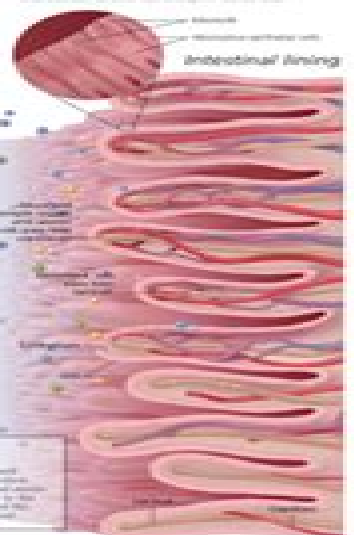

The stomach

The stomach is a J-shaped organ that is responsible for the digestion of food. It receives food from the esophagus and mixes it with gastric juice, which contains the enzyme pepsin. The stomach wall has three layers: the mucosa, the submucosa, and the muscularis. The muscularis is responsible for the churning motion of the stomach.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. It is responsible for the digestion of food and the absorption of nutrients. The wall of the small intestine is covered with finger-like projections called villi, which increase the surface area for absorption.

Intestinal lining

Absorption

The small intestine is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food. The villi on the intestinal lining increase the surface area for absorption. Nutrients are absorbed into the bloodstream through the capillaries in the villi.
