

The Digestive System

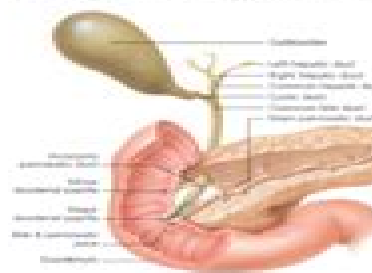

What is the digestive system?

The digestive system, or gastrointestinal tract, is a tract of organs that is responsible for digesting and absorbing nutrients from food. Food enters through the mouth, is broken down in the stomach, and then moves through the small intestine, where nutrients are absorbed. The digestive system also includes accessory organs that help in the process, such as the liver, pancreas, and gallbladder.

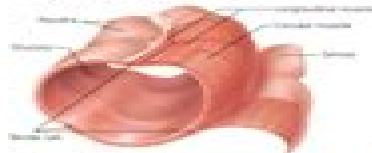

Liver, pancreas & gallbladder

After leaving the stomach, digested material enters the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, which is connected to the stomach by the duodenal papilla. The liver, pancreas, and gallbladder are located in the upper right quadrant of the abdomen. The liver is the largest organ in the body and is responsible for producing bile, which is stored in the gallbladder. The pancreas is a gland that produces pancreatic juice, which is released into the small intestine. The gallbladder is a small sac that stores bile.

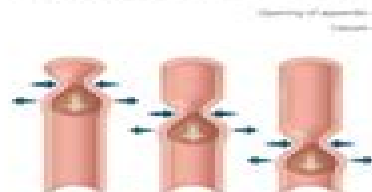

Layers of large intestine

Large intestine

The large intestine consists of the cecum, the appendix, the ascending colon, the transverse colon, the descending colon, the sigmoid colon, and the rectum. The large intestine is responsible for absorbing water and electrolytes from the undigested food and for forming and storing feces.

Peristaltic action

Food material is pushed through the digestive system by a series of powerful muscular contractions called peristalsis. These contractions are initiated by the nervous system and the digestive system itself. The digestive system also has a reflex action, which is called the peristaltic reflex.

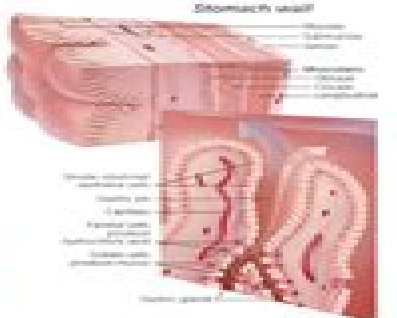

The mouth & salivary glands

Chewing, the mechanical action of the food, is called mastication. The food is broken down into small pieces, which are then swallowed and enter the stomach. The salivary glands, which are located in the mouth, produce saliva, which is used to moisten the food and to begin the process of digestion. The salivary glands also produce enzymes that help in the digestion of food.

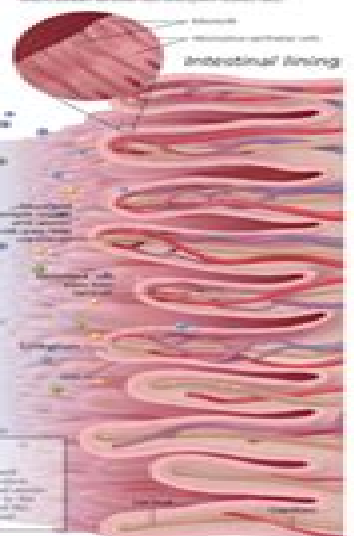

The stomach

The stomach is a large, muscular organ that is responsible for storing and digesting food. It is located in the upper left quadrant of the abdomen. The stomach has a thick wall and is divided into two main parts: the cardia, which is the entrance to the stomach, and the pylorus, which is the exit. The stomach also has a large, coiled part called the body, which is responsible for the majority of the digestion of food.

Small intestine

The small intestine consists of three parts: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum. The duodenum is the first part of the small intestine and is responsible for the initial digestion of food. The jejunum is the middle part of the small intestine and is responsible for the majority of the digestion of food. The ileum is the last part of the small intestine and is responsible for the absorption of nutrients from the food.

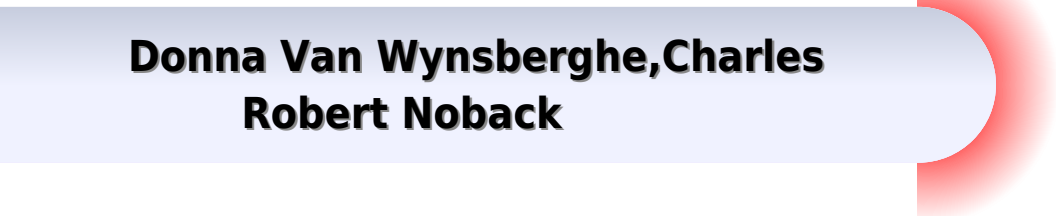

Absorption

The process of absorption is the process by which nutrients from the food are taken up by the body. The nutrients are absorbed through the walls of the small intestine and enter the bloodstream. The nutrients are then transported to the cells of the body, where they are used for energy and for the growth and repair of the body.
