Ashley (CAPT, USAF.), 1999 The Air Force Operational Risk Management Program and Aviation Safety Matthew G. Cho, 2003-04 Aviation mishaps are extremely costly in terms of dollar value public opinion and human life The Air Force drastically reduced Class A mishap rates in its formative years The rate plummeted from 44 22 mishaps per 100 000 flight hours in 1947 to 2 33 mishaps in 1983 and has held steady around 1 5 mishaps since The Air Force implemented the Operational Risk Management ORM program in 1996 in an effort to protect their most valuable resources aircraft and aviators An AFIT thesis conducted in 1999 by Capt Park Ashley studied the Army similar Risk Management RM program Ashley concluded that since his analysis found that RM did not affect the Army s mishap rates the AF should not expect to see its rates decline due to ORM implementation Risk Management, 1989 Operational Risk Management and Military Aviation Safety Park D. Ashley, 1999-09-01 The Air Force Class A aviation mishap rate has hovered around 1 5 mishaps per 100 000 flight hours since 1985 Recent attention on Air Force accidents has caused the leadership to seek to reduce its mishap rate The Army s Class A aviation mishap rate declined after it implemented risk management RM principles in 1987 This reduction caught the attention of Air Force leadership who have since stated that the application of operational risk management ORM is how the Air Force will reduce even eliminate mishaps With current budget constraints ORM is considered to be the most cost effective way the Air Force can reduce its mishap rate The purpose of this research was to determine whether the Air Force can expect its mishap rate to significantly decline due to ORM implementation This determination is based on the relationship between the Army s implementation of RM and its aviation mishap rate The analysis of the Army s aviation mishap rates and available causal data was performed primarily using discontinuous piecewise linear regression Results showed that the effect of RM was not reflected in the Army s mishap rates As a result the Air Force should not expect its mishap rate to significantly decline due to ORM implementation Fundamentals of Risk Management Stephen W.
