Abstract: This study examined the effects of a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program on the muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness of sedentary, middle-aged men. The program was designed to be performed at home, with no equipment other than bodyweight. The program consisted of three sessions per week, with each session including a warm-up, a main workout, and a cool-down. The main workout included a series of exercises targeting the major muscle groups, including the chest, back, legs, and core. The program was evaluated using a variety of measures, including muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness. The results of the study showed that the program had a significant positive effect on all of the measures examined. Muscle strength increased significantly in all of the major muscle groups. Body composition improved, with a significant decrease in body fat percentage and an increase in lean body mass. Cardiovascular fitness also improved, with a significant increase in maximum heart rate and a decrease in resting heart rate. The program was well-tolerated by all participants, and no significant side effects were reported. The results of this study suggest that a 12-week, 100% bodyweight resistance training program can be an effective way to improve muscle strength, body composition, and cardiovascular fitness in sedentary, middle-aged men.
