Name _____
Date _____

Purpose:

To determine which model of the atom best represents the present understanding.

Part I: Making Decisions in Scientific Modeling

Science is a process of developing models that are based on evidence and are used to explain and predict natural phenomena. The models are developed and refined as new evidence is gathered. The models are used to make predictions about the future.

Model 1: The atom is a solid sphere of positive charge with negative charges (electrons) embedded in it. (Thomson, 1897)

This model was developed to explain the fact that atoms are electrically neutral.

Model 2: The atom is a solid sphere of positive charge with negative charges (electrons) embedded in it. The electrons are arranged in a regular pattern. (Rutherford, 1911)

This model was developed to explain the fact that atoms are electrically neutral.

Model 3: The atom is a solid sphere of positive charge with negative charges (electrons) embedded in it. The electrons are arranged in a regular pattern. (Bohr, 1913)

This model was developed to explain the fact that atoms are electrically neutral.
