ABORTION LAW

Judge knocks enforcement

24th judge strikes blow to Texas' abortion law, ruling it unconstitutional

By David Rosenberg
A federal judge in Texas has ruled that the state's abortion law is unconstitutional, a decision that could have a significant impact on the law's enforcement.

The judge, Judge Reed, ruled that the law is unconstitutional because it is too vague and does not provide enough guidance for law enforcement. He also found that the law is unconstitutional because it is too broad and covers too many situations.

The judge's decision is a significant blow to the law, which has been a major point of contention in Texas. The law, which was passed in 2021, bans most abortions after a certain point in pregnancy.

Supreme Court

Rejection of Texas' law

The Supreme Court has rejected Texas' attempt to block the federal judge's decision. The court ruled that the law is constitutional and that the federal judge's decision is not binding.
