Yu, 2022-01-30 Representation learning in heterogeneous graphs HG is intended to provide a meaningful vector representation for each node so as to facilitate downstream applications such as link prediction personalized recommendation node classification etc This task however is challenging not only because of the need to incorporate heterogeneous structural graph information consisting of multiple types of node and edge but also the need to consider heterogeneous attributes or types of content e.g. text or image associated with each node. Although considerable advances have been made in homogeneous and heterogeneous graph embedding, attributed graph embedding and graph neural networks, few are capable of simultaneously and effectively taking into account heterogeneous structural graph information as well as the heterogeneous content information of each node. In this book, we provide a comprehensive survey of current developments in HG representation learning. More importantly, we present the state of the art in this field, including theoretical models and real applications that have been showcased at the top conferences and journals such as TKDE, KDD, WWW, IJCAI, and AAAI. The book has two major objectives: 1) to provide researchers with an understanding of the fundamental issues and a good point of departure for working in this rapidly expanding field, and 2) to present the latest research on applying heterogeneous graphs to model real systems and learning structural features of interaction systems. To the best of our knowledge, it is the first book to summarize the latest developments and present cutting-edge research on heterogeneous graph representation learning. To gain the most from it, readers should have a basic grasp of computer science, data mining, and machine learning.
