Investigation at Supersonic Speeds of the Compressor Stall and Inlet Buzz Characteristics of a J34 - Spike-inlet Combination J. Cary Nettles, 1958 For a Mach number range from 1.6 to 2.0 and angles of attack from 0 to 9 degrees, the occurrence of stall was related to the presence of a pressure deficiency at the hub of the compressor. The referred engine air flow tended to increase as radial distortion level increased. Approaching the inlet buzz limit with the engine operating in or near a stall condition did not affect the minimum stable air flow of the diffuser, and conversely, the presence of mild buzz did not affect the compressor stall limit. The stability limits of a 15 degree plus 10 degree double cone inlet were essentially the same with the engine as with a choked plug.
