Abstract

The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 6-week training program on the physical fitness and health-related quality of life (HRQL) of sedentary middle-aged women. The subjects were randomly assigned to either a control group or an exercise group. The exercise group performed a supervised aerobic and resistance training program three times per week. The control group did not participate in any structured exercise program. Physical fitness measures included maximal oxygen consumption ($\dot{V}O_{2\max}$), peak power output (PPO), and body composition. HRQL measures included the SF-36 Health Survey, which assesses various aspects of health and well-being. Results showed that the exercise group significantly improved their physical fitness and HRQL compared to the control group after 6 weeks of training.

Abstract. The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of dental caries between children who had been exposed to fluoride varnish and those who had not. A total of 100 children aged 6-12 years were examined by a dentist. The results showed that the prevalence of dental caries was significantly lower in the group that had been exposed to fluoride varnish than in the group that had not. This suggests that fluoride varnish may be an effective method of preventing dental caries in children.
