Abstract. The latest AI language modules can produce original, high quality full short-form (300-word) Physics essays within seconds. These technologies such as ChatGPT and davinci-003 are freely available to anyone with an internet connection. In this work, we present evidence of AI generated short-form essays achieving first-class grades on an essay writing assessment from an accredited, current university Physics module. The assessment requires students answer five open-ended questions with a short, 300-word essay each. Fifty AI answers were generated to create ten submissions that were independently marked by five separate markers. The AI generated submissions achieved an average mark of $71 \pm 2\%$, in strong agreement with the current module average of $71 \pm 5\%$. A typical AI submission would therefore most-likely be awarded a First Class, the highest classification available at UK universities. Plagiarism detection software returned a plagiarism score between $2 \pm 1\%$ (Grammarly) and $7 \pm 2\%$ (Turnitin). We argue that these results indicate that current AI MLPs represent a significant threat to the fidelity of short-form essays as an assessment method in Physics courses.

1. Introduction

1.1. Background

AI text-completion technologies have undergone rapid development in recent years, outpacing commonplace perceptions of their quality. It is now possible to use these tools to reliably produce quality content that is accurate, clear and critical, on practically any topic of choice. These tools can produce content that is highly idiosyncratic, and which is nearly indistinguishable from human-produced content [1, 2]. Furthermore, these technologies are becoming increasingly accessible, fast, cheap and incredibly easy to use, essentially only requiring users to specify a brief text prompt. The effort required to produce such a prompt could entail simply copying and pasting a question from an assignment. Clearly, such technologies could pose a threat to the fidelity of existing forms of assessment, as AI written work could be submitted by students and both pass

Constituting Objectivity Michael Bitbol,Pierre Kerszberg,Jean Petitot,2009-03-29 In recent years many philosophers of modern physics came to the conclusion that the problem of how objectivity is constituted rather than merely given can no longer be avoided and therefore that a transcendental approach in the spirit of Kant is now philosophically relevant The usual excuse for skipping this task is that the historical form given by Kant to transcendental epistemology has been challenged by

Relativity and Quantum Physics However the true challenge is not to force modern physics into a rigidly construed static version of Kant's philosophy but to provide Kant's method with flexibility and generality In this book the top specialists of the field pin down the methodological core of transcendental epistemology that must be used in order to throw light on the foundations of modern physics First the basic tools Kant used for his transcendental reading of Newtonian Mechanics are examined and then early transcendental approaches of Relativistic and Quantum Physics are revisited Transcendental procedures are also applied to contemporary physics and this renewed transcendental interpretation is finally compared with structural realism and constructive empiricism The book will be of interest to scientists historians and philosophers who are involved in the foundational problems of modern physics Proceedings of The 14th IAC 2019 group of
