Abstract: The American Joint Committee on Cancer (AJCC) staging manual has become the benchmark for classifying patients with cancer, defining prognosis, and determining the best treatment approaches. Many view the primary role of the tumor, lymph node, metastasis (TNM) system as that of a standardized classification system for evaluating cancer at a population level in terms of the extent of disease, both at initial presentation and after surgical treatment, and the overall impact of improvements in cancer treatment. The rapid evolution of knowledge in cancer biology and the discovery and validation of biologic factors that predict cancer outcome and response to treatment with better accuracy have led some cancer experts to question the utility of a TNM-based approach in clinical care at an individualized patient level. In the Eighth Edition of the AJCC Cancer Staging Manual, the goal of including relevant, nonanatomic (including molecular) factors has been foremost, although changes are made only when there is strong evidence for inclusion. The editorial board viewed this iteration as a proactive effort to continue to build the important bridge from a “population-based” to a more “personalized” approach to patient classification, one that forms the conceptual framework and foundation of cancer staging in the era of precision molecular oncology. The AJCC promulgates best staging practices through each new edition in an effort to provide cancer care providers with a powerful, knowledge-based resource for the battle against cancer. In this commentary, the authors highlight the overall organizational and structural changes as well as “what’s new” in the Eighth Edition. It is hoped that this information will provide the reader with a better understanding of the rationale behind the aggregate proposed changes and the exciting developments in the upcoming edition. CA Cancer J Clin 2017;67:93-99. © 2017 American Cancer Society.

Introduction and Overarching Vision of AJCC Staging

The Eighth Edition of the AJCC Cancer Staging Manual, published in October 2016, is a compendium of all currently available information on the staging of adult cancers for all clinically important anatomic sites. It builds on a rich historical legacy of dynamic vision, international synergy, and the robust principles of cancer classification using the anatomic extent of disease: tumor, lymph node, metastasis (TNM) concept first developed by Pierre Denoix in the 1940s and 1950s.¹ The First Edition of the AJCC Cancer Staging Manual was published in 1977 and broadened the scope of the American Joint Committee on Cancer (AJCC) in the staging of cancer for American physicians and registrars. The founding editors aptly noted that: “Staging of cancer is not an exact science. As new information becomes available about etiology and various methods of diagnosis and treatment, the classification and staging of cancer will change. Periodically, this manual

Cancer of the Esophagus - ECAB Samiran Nundy, 2012-06-15 Of all the malignant lesions of the gastrointestinal tract cancer of the esophagus is among the most difficult to manage Although it has fairly typical presenting clinical features in the form of an elderly patient with dysphagia the subsequent investigations have to be fine tuned to select which patient should undergo esophageal resection a formidable procedure which carries a high mortality risk and is associated with serious complications who should undergo neoadjuvant therapy and who should only be palliated with stents or chemoradiotherapy In recent years this fine tuning has become much more precise with many patients being saved from harmful explorations of the chest and abdomen only to encounter widespread disease and at the same time many who have large locally invasive tumors which were thought to be unresectable being given neoadjuvant chemotherapy and subsequently being able sometimes to undergo curative esophagectomy Possibly because of these improvements in diagnosis and multimodality
