Cells can be very diverse: superficially, they come in various sizes, ranging from bacterial cells such as Lactobacillus, which is a few _____ in length, to larger cells such as a frog's egg, which has a diameter of about one _____. Despite the diversity, cells resemble each other to an astonishing degree in their chemistry. For example, the same 20 _____ are used to make proteins. Similarly, the genetic information of all cells is stored in their _____. Although _____ contain the same types of molecules as cells, their inability to reproduce themselves by their own efforts means that they are not considered living matter.
