

Alexander Graham Bell (1847-1922)

Alexander Graham Bell was an inventor. He is best known for inventing the first working telephone.

Early Life

- Alexander was born in Edinburgh, Scotland.
- He was taught at home by his mother until he was 11.
- Alexander liked to find ways to solve problems and built his first invention when he was only 12.

Work

Alexander was interested in speech and how sounds were made. His mother was almost completely deaf and his father invented a 'Visible Speech' system. This helped Deaf people learn to develop speech.

Alexander became a teacher for the Deaf and used his father's system to help his students.

Fascinating Fact

Alexander invented the first metal detector in 1881.

How does it work? It uses a coil of wire buried in the ground. When a metal object is buried nearby, it creates a magnetic field that can be detected by the coil.

The Telephone

Alexander and his assistant, Thomas Watson, began working on a machine that used electricity to send sound. They invented the telephone in 1876. It sent the human voice over electrical wires.

Other inventors were working on a similar idea at the same time, but theirs was successful first.

Helping Others

- Alexander used money he had earned to help young scientists.
- He set up a centre that researches deafness.
- He also helped to create the National Geographic Society.
