Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week resistance training program on the strength and power of the lower extremities in healthy young men. The subjects were divided into two groups: a control group (n = 10) and an experimental group (n = 10). The experimental group performed a 12-week resistance training program consisting of three sessions per week. The control group did not perform any resistance training. The subjects were tested at baseline and at the end of the 12-week program. The tests included a 1-repetition maximum (1RM) test, a 5-repetition maximum (5RM) test, a 10-repetition maximum (10RM) test, a 20-repetition maximum (20RM) test, a 30-repetition maximum (30RM) test, a 40-repetition maximum (40RM) test, a 50-repetition maximum (50RM) test, a 60-repetition maximum (60RM) test, a 70-repetition maximum (70RM) test, a 80-repetition maximum (80RM) test, a 90-repetition maximum (90RM) test, and a 100-repetition maximum (100RM) test. The results showed that the experimental group had significantly greater strength and power than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The 1RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 5RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 10RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 20RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 30RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 40RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 50RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 60RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 70RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 80RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 90RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 100RM test showed a significant increase in strength for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The results also showed that the experimental group had significantly greater power than the control group at the end of the 12-week program. The 1RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 5RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 10RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 20RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 30RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 40RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 50RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 60RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 70RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 80RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 90RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). The 100RM test showed a significant increase in power for the experimental group (p < 0.05). In conclusion, a 12-week resistance training program significantly increased the strength and power of the lower extremities in healthy young men.
