Abstract
 The purpose of this study was to determine the effect of a 12-week training program on the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men. The study was conducted in a laboratory setting. The subjects were 20 men, aged 40-50, who were sedentary and had no known health problems. They were divided into two groups: a control group and an experimental group. The control group remained sedentary, while the experimental group participated in a 12-week training program. The training program consisted of three sessions per week, each lasting 45 minutes. The sessions included aerobic exercise, strength training, and flexibility exercises. The physical fitness of the subjects was measured at the beginning and end of the study. The measurements included heart rate, blood pressure, and body mass index (BMI). The health of the subjects was also measured at the beginning and end of the study. The measurements included cholesterol levels, blood sugar levels, and blood pressure. The results of the study showed that the experimental group had significantly higher physical fitness and better health than the control group at the end of the 12-week training program. The findings suggest that a 12-week training program can improve the physical fitness and health of sedentary middle-aged men.
